On

Restitution of Ukraine's Private Sector and Funding during the War

Ukraine's private sector keeps working despite increasing war damage, with losses now over $500bn and climbing. Recoveries for these losses by the private sector is difficult but necessary to repair damage and help businesses continue, increasingly necessary for the economy to contribute to the war effort. Russian assets will eventually be the principal source of compensation, but the policy decisions and litigation for this can take years, and businesses need funding now.

Based on his presentation at the recent UK parliamentary roundtable on Russian Asset Seizure for Ukraine that he chaired, Petr Stransky will talk on:

1. International efforts to use Russian assets for Ukraine - where this stands in the UK, Europe and internationally, and which assets can realistically be reached;
2. Routes to compensation: litigation, countermeasures and policy decisions, and how quickly can each deliver for business;
3. What businesses need to do now to document, validate and preserve their claims for damage and losses;
4. How funding can be provided during the war based on validated claims quickly becoming financeable assets; and
5. The role of the UK, European and allied financial industries in the process.

Petr Stansky, is Founder & CEO of The Feniks Alliance, a firm specialising in strategic solutions and financing for international legal assets, claims and complex recovery initiatives. The firm operates the Feniks Alliance Program, which supports Ukrainian businesses in preparing and validating claims, managing the compensation recovery process and accessing financing options. Petr is also a Founding Partner of IDAP Global, an investment and strategic advisory firm.
